THE CONSPIRACY.

While Republicans were slow to believe in the possibility of the shameful Democratic plot to steal the State Legislature, the Governor and State Government, and the Electoral vote of Maine by a fraudulent canvass of the election returns, there is reason to think that they have too readily yielded to a conviction that the conspiracy has been abandoned. That the Governor and Council became alarmed by the appeal to the Court is beyond question, and it is more than probable that they were advised by some of the cooler heads that they were getting themselves into a bad fix. The Order in Council specifying Dec. 1 to 13 for examining the returns and hearing claimants was unquestionably intended to be construed by the Republicans at any rate, as a promise to permit us to inspect the returns for the purpose of correction. That the order was curiously and somewhat vaguely worded everybody could see, but members of the Council declared it was meant in good faith, and the Republicans were willing to give the proclamation the benefit of every doubt. Hence they postponed the proceedings before the Court to the term in Oxford County which begins in time for action in case of any trickery at Augusta, at the advertised meeting of the Council to begin Dec. 1. A correspondent in this issue of our paper calls attention to the apparently purposely obscure wording of the Council order, and expresses a doubt that is shared by many, as to whether the returns will be opened in good faith for inspection. We must say that our confidence in that remarkable body of officials is not very great, and that we shall not be surprised at any further exhibition of their unscrupulous partisanship and disregard of law.

The positive proof that we have obtained, showing how the Democrats have been tampering with the returns by secretly securing amended and corrected ones from Democratic towns, in direct violation of law, leaves no room to doubt the desperate character of the conspiracy organized to overthrow the results of our election. The men who have engineered the plot are utterly reckless and they will not give up as long as there is a possibility of consummating their designs. That they have had a powerful hold upon the Governor and Council has already been proved by the manner in which those officials have defied law, custom and decency in furthering the "counting out" scheme. Whether the control of the chief conspirators over the whole canvassing board is strong enough to force them to again challenge public indignation a few days will show.

In the mean time the Republicans must not abate their vigilance for a moment, or relax in the slightest degree their preparations to resist fraud. The conspirators must be given to understand that the people of Maine will never submit to be robbed of their liberties by any villany at the State Capital.

THE CATHOLIC WAR ON THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

A great deal of public interest is excited by a recently reported announcement concerning the policy of the Roman Catholic church in New England toward the public schools. It is said that the Archbishop, following the advice of the Pope to a European bishop, has directed all the priests in the Archdiocese of New England to establish parochial schools at once and that he threatens parents who refuse to patronize the new schools with the terrors of the Church. In localities where the influence of the public schools is thought to be particularly injurious to Catholic youths the priests are instructed to withdraw the children at once, even if there be no parochial schools in the vicinity. This brings the war against the public schools to a point where the people cannot well misunderstand or ignore it. Here is a significant item from the Boston Herald:

> For some time past Rev. Father Scully, in pursuance of his peculiar method, has forced the children who attend the public schools, and who came to take part in the Sunday School connected with his church, to sit in an isolated place in the gallery. This week he has not had them that their further attendance has longer desired.

While Solon Chase is quoted against the "counting out" fraud, the Portland Greenback organ the New Era, clamorously urges that the villany must be accomplished to prevent the Republicans from holding the State next year. The cool way in which that sheet calls on the Governor and Council to perpetrate a monstrous crime, plainly shows the reckless spirit that animated the coalition campaign.

The Baltimore Gazette is one of the few Democratic papers that have opposed the Maine conspiracy. It tells its Democratic party friends in Maine that if they are "foolish enough to perpetrate the fraud which the Republicans say they are about to do," they will simply commit a blunder worse than a crime.

When it comes to the sticking point the Democracy of Maine will hesitate "to move the previous question." There will be a debate after a hereafter. If they persist in their revolutionary schemes it will grow warm in Maine, considering the coolness of the season.—Inter-Ocean.

A LOTTERY FORTUNE. The demoralizing effects of lottery luck have been recently illustrated in New York, in the case of the newspaper compositor who attained some notoriety last April by drawing $5000 in a lottery from the investment of 67 cents. On getting the money he abandoned the position in which he had been earning from $20 to $25 a week, and in six months, as his wife says, he has spent $3800 in personal enjoyment, leaving her to work and provide for the children. When she upbraided him for his prodigality he threatened her life and she had him arrested and he has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment on Blackwell's Island.

The Boston Globe tried to make merry over "Boutelle's Discovery," but it evidently does not feel happy. It first declares that we will never publish the names or prove the facts about secretly sending in amended Democratic returns, and then it cautiously hedges by saying if we do prove it "it amounts to nothing." We will gratify the Globe's curiosity in due time, and show the self-styled Republicans who are running the meanest Democratic sheet in the country that they have rolled over in the political mire with as unscrupulous scamps as themselves.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLOT.

The Conspiracy Directed from Outside the State.

[Special to Boston Traveller.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 26. From the remarks made by Democratic Congressmen, since their arrival here during the past week, it is evident that the Democratic conspiracy to get control of Maine during the next year, is the outgrowth of a consultation among the Democratic managers from all sections of the country. It is not purely local in its bearings, but is intended to have a deeper significance than would appear upon the surface.

Shrewd Democratic politicians now here intimate that the course pursued by Governor Garcelon was thoroughly discussed and considered by some of the ablest legal minds of the country, and was not determined upon until his legal and constitutional right to do what he has done was fully established. In the steps taken he has the support of the Democratic managers of the party at large, and the assertion is boldly made that having entered upon a course of action he will not falter, but carry his point, i. e. the Democratic control of the new Legislature.

The feeling here among Republicans is one of confidence in the ability of Senator Blaine and his associates to successfully checkmate the revolutionary scheme of Governor Garcelon, and have the laws and the will of the majority of the citizens of the Pine Tree State, as expressed at the late election, fully executed.

THE CONSPIRACY.

To the Editor of the Whig & Courier:

The present lull in the political excitement of our State will give us opportunity to calmly canvass the facts of our late election—the efforts of a mongrel returning board to thwart the will of the people—the policy that will probably be pursued and the influence of the whole controversy on the great contest of next year.

It may be unfortunate that a majority is essential to the election of a Chief Magistrate in Maine, and that question cannot enter into the argument at present. The Republican party has made choice of a majority of 30 in the House and 7 in the Senate. This is conceded by all classes of politicians and gives that party the Governor unless a conspiracy, the most monstrous ever attempted north of Mason and Dixon's line shall meet with success.

That the Governor and Council are intended to act only in a ministerial capacity is too plain to admit of honest controversy. Not a single argument that has yet been advanced by the fusion organs can give that body the shadow of authority to go behind the returns. If they refuse to give certificates to any one who appears to be elected by the face of the returns they may with equal propriety make both branches of the Legislature unanimously fusion. They have the power (and it seems the will) but no constitutional or legal authority to do either. They claim the right on merely technical grounds. Even though this were so the people are not in a mood to submit to it quietly, but this is the flimsiest argument. Their duty is confined within well defined and simple bounds, and any attempt to exceed those limits will be met with deserving chastisement.

Seven-eighths of that soon to be historical body have no political future and they may cry out with Milton's Satan when driven into the "lowest depth:" "Farewell hope, farewell fear, farewell remorse: all good to me is lost."

They are the remnants of a political party that a year ago brought consternation to the law abiding citizens of our State; but they have "blazed, the comet of a season" and will soon pass off out of sight in the political heavens. Resumption and business prosperity have made them but the "flattering index of a direful pageant." They cannot rule; the question is, have they the courage to further attempt to rule?

The recent proclamation by the Council that they would be in session from "Dec. 1st to 13th, for the purpose of examining the returns" does not specify that parties interested shall have the privilege of seeing the returns. They shall only have "an opportunity to be heard." The satisfaction thus afforded may be like unto that given in a writ before a Dutch Trial Justice. When asked by the plaintiff to suspend his judgment until he had carefully considered the case he remarked, I shall take two weeks to consider this case but I shall then decide for the defendant.

If the returns are voluntarily opened to the inspection of interested parties it will be because the Council have not the courage to withstand the storm of indignation that is coming up from all parties in every section of the State. If they absolutely refuse to exhibit the returns the Judicial branch will be appealed to at the December term in Oxford county.

The Democratic party, while they would be glad to see the conspiracy succeed "if sworn done when it is done," are not blind to the position it would create. Their influence however cannot reach these "Generals without an army," these politicians without a party. Still it is people will hold that party responsible for even the attempt to cheat them of their choice. It will be the means of adding thousands to the majority that the Republican candidate is sure to get next year.

The people, through their choice of Representatives and Senators, have practically made choice of Mr. Davis for Governor and they will see to it that he is inaugurated.

J. W. D.

We have received a copy of the weekly edition of the Hudson, N. Y., Daily Register, containing that editorial about the "Mad-awaska scare" which the Commercial recently stole and then wished it hadn't.

THE LOUISIANA SENATORSHIP.

MR. KELLOGG REPELLING THE ASSAULT UPON HIM—BEN HILL AGAIN EXHIBITING HIMSELF.

[Special to the N. Y. Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 25. In the Kellogg-Spofford contest for a seat in the United States Senate, Senator Kellogg began his rebutting testimony to-day. The 12 witnesses examined completely knocked the bottom out of Mr. Spofford's case as far as developed, and left the Democratic managers dumfounded. Senator Hill, of Georgia, Chairman of the sub-committee, whose strong partisanship has been manifested at every stage of the investigation, lost his temper completely, indulged in loud and insulting side remarks in regard to the testimony of witnesses—some of them merchants of reputable standing, having no personal or political interest in the case—and generally deported himself in a manner that was, to say the least, extremely unbecoming in the presiding officer of a committee of the United States Senate instructed to inquire into the title of a fellow-Senator. In cross-examining one witness, a colored preacher, he so far violated the rules of courtesy and propriety as to ask him if his congregation was exclusively colored, and being answered yes, followed up by the question whether Senator Kellogg was a member of his church, and whether he did not regard the Senator as a Christian statesman. In the course of the proceedings Mr. Hill announced that as he had already been called upon to summon [illegible] twice as many witnesses for [illegible] as Judge Spofford, he would [illegible] his sitting members [illegible]

TERRORISM IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

TRUTH FROM AN UNREFRACTED QUARTER.

No one will accuse the Boston Herald of any inclination to "wave the bloody shirt," and in fact that paper has always taken pains to put the best face possible upon Southern outrages. It is pretty evident, therefore that matters must have reached a serious state indeed, when the Herald's special correspondent sends such a despatch as the following:

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 20. It will be remembered that Nix, the colored Postmaster at Blackville, was shot through the delivery window recently by a Democrat named Williams. On Tuesday evening his brother was probably fatally shot at Barnwell by Barney Jeffcott. The cause assigned was Jeffcott's indignation, because of his suspicion that Nix had reported him for a violation of the revenue laws. Nix is still subjected to the greatest indignities while on duty, and informed me yesterday that he had every reason to believe that he will be killed. The United States Commissioner who examined Williams was obliged to stay in the Court House, and, at the first opportunity, to retire to Columbia for safety. A crowd of young roughs in Barnwell, Saturday night a few weeks ago, fired into a group of negroes who were doing their marketing, and killed a boy named Thomas Greene. The negroes were afraid to report or prosecute the case, and nothing has been done in the matter. The negroes complain bitterly of their treatment and the danger and indignities they undergo in Barnwell county.

All New York and the rest of the country is wondering over the recent enormous sale of two hundred and fifty thousand shares of New York Central Railroad stock by William H. Vanderbilt to a syndicate of New York and foreign bankers. Why Vanderbilt should thus voluntarily divest himself of the absolute control of a property that has been tenaciously held in the family is a question that no one seems to have answered satisfactorily, although a number, including Mr. Vanderbilt himself, have attempted to explain it. The sale amounted to $30,000,000 and was the largest sale of railroad stock ever made by a single owner. Mr. Vanderbilt still holds more than half the stock of the company.

The N. Y. Times a few days ago denounced the Tribune's report of pending negotiations for a heavy sale of N. Y. Central stock by Vanderbilt, as a "stock-jobbing lie," and accompanied this with a vigorous berating of the Tribune. On Thursday the Tribune quietly took its revenge by publishing the full facts of the transaction and by seeing the Times compelled to devote four columns to a report of what it had prematurely denounced as a lie.

A MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Would your family be left unprovided for in the event of your decease to-morrow? Can any man who is dependent for support upon his daily labor afford to neglect this question? Neglect for a day the solemn duty of insuring his life for such an amount as he may be able to pay the premium upon? A few cents a day will at least secure his wife and children against absolute want.

THE TWO LOVE LETTERS.

"We don't keep boarders," said Mrs. Farquahar, looking in owlish fashion thro' her spectacle glasses at Mr. Stuart Waller. "We've got plenty to do, sir, without the trouble of 'em. You'll find the tavern about three-quarters of a mile below. You must have come right past it, sir."

"So I did," said Mr. Waller, who possessed the insinuating, semi-chivalric manner that made every lady whom he addressed feel herself for the time being the only feminine creature in all the universe; "but no amount of money would hire me to make my home in a place like that. Here it is like a glimpse of paradise," looking around admiringly at the shady lawns, the clematis-bordered porch, and the rose hedges all sprinkled over with pink buds. "I am sure, madam, you will reconsider your decision, and take me for a few days, and I will promise to be no more trouble around the house than a kitten."

Mrs. Farquahar was but human, and the upshot of matters was that Mr. Waller's trunk, sir, in the next day.

"Oh, my mother," said Patty Farquahar, knitting her pretty eyebrows, "why did you let him in? And we so peaceful and comfortable here!"

"Child, why shouldn't I?" said the widow. "He'sa to pay ten dollars a week board, and I have no use for the little three-cornered room over the parlor."

"I don't know," said Patty, slowly, "but it seems to me I feel exactly as Eve must have felt when she saw the serpent wriggling his way into Paradise."

"Nonsense!" said widow Farquahar, almost angrily.

But Patty only laughed, and ran away under the shadow of the pink buds to meet her affianced lover, Morris Newton.

"Little one," said Morris, compressing both her soft, white hands in his, "I've got bad news for you."

"Bad news, Morris?"

"I've got to go to Omaha next week to see about those silver mines that one of my clients had an interest in."

"Oh dear," pursing up her strawberry of a mouth.

"I shall be gone six months"

"Worse and worse," said Patty

"But if you say so, Patty," drawing her to his side, "we can be married first and make a wedding trip of it"

The idea flashed back Patty, drawing herself out of his embrace. "And I without a single dress made"

"We can buy the dresses afterward."

"That's all a man knows about it"

"I'm sure it's impossible" with a disappointed air.

"Oh, quite," retorted the little brunette.

"Then," said Mr. Newton, with a sigh, "you must write very often, and be getting your fal de-rols ready to be married as soon as I come home."

"Yes," said Patty, gravely, "that's more reasonable."

And she went into the house utterly ignorant that, at the same time, Mr. Stuart Waller was laying a wager with a boon companion at the Easterworth Arms, that he could get out that consented lawyer in less than four weeks.

For Mr. Waller was piqued by Patty's cool indifference, and, unfortunately, he were the "idle hands" for which Satan is said to find plenty of mischief to do.

"She's pretty after a fashion," said he to himself, "and I mean to make her dead in love with me before I'm through."

Mr. Stuart Waller was a man of the world. Patty Farquahar was as young in experience as 15 years. They were an ill-mated pair, and it was hardly three weeks before the tongue of gossip began to busy itself with the widow's dark-eyed daughter.

Mrs. Farquahar came into Patty's room one afternoon, and found her crying as if her heart would break, and with an open letter in her lap

"Heart alive, child! what's the matter?" cried the old lady.

"Nothing, nothing, nothing!" cried Patty, hurriedly wiping her eyes. "Only I have got a letter from Morris, and it makes me feel so glad and so sorry."

"Folks didn't cry over love letters when I was a gal," said Mrs. Farquahar.

But the letter was more than Patty than Mrs. Farquahar suspected. Every trusting word, every caressing adjective was an envenomed arrow in her heart.

Patty knew that almost unconsciously she had been led into what seemed to her an innocent flirtation with Stuart Waller—she had walked with him in the twilight, and she had written him two letters, when he was temporarily absent in New York—careless, girlish letters, which, although she had no thought of harm at the time, she could now give worlds to recall.

"I'll ask him to return them to me," said Patty, to herself, "and then I'll turn over a new leaf. I will go to Aunt Prudence's while he remains here, and begin my wedding clothes in good earnest"

But when Patty Farquahar preferred her innocent request Mr. Waller laughed in her face.

"My dear Patty," said he, do you take me for a fool?"

"My name is Miss Farquahar," said the girl, with flashing eyes.

"Excuse me, but when you say, 'Dear Stuart—'"

"I never said such a thing!" interrupted Patty, with burning cheeks and eyes aflame.

"In the letter!"

"I said 'Dear Mr. Waller'" panted Patty.

"Excuse me once more. Your memory plays you false."

"Will you return me the letters?"

"Miss Farquahar," with a low bow, "they are a great deal too precious to me."

"You refuse?"

"I never refuse anything to a lady; but—"

Patty did not stay to hear the conclusion, but rushed out into the afternoon sunshine, with a large lump in her throat and a curious sensation as if all her blood was turned to fire.

"What a fool I have been," she thought, pacing up and down the tiny graveled walk like a chained panthress, and biting her scarlet lip. "Oh, what an idiotic, unreasonable fool! And what will become of me if Morris Newton sees these forsaken. But, surely, surely, in the wildest moment of infatuation, I never addressed him as 'Dear Stuart' Be that as it may, however, I must, and will get those letters back."

Fired with indignation, Miss Farquahar resolved herself into a private detective, searched Mr. Waller's room and even got a false key to his trunk and went through the contents. But all in vain. And she had the satisfaction of perceiving by Mr. Waller's amused and patronizing air that he knew all about it.

"I'll have them yet," said Patty.

Miss Farquahar was standing with clasped hands before the wide-opened door of the old-fashioned oven, built on the side of the kitchen chimney and resembling a sort of humpback excrescence out into the lilac bushes of the back garden when Mr. Waller came in with a string of speckled trout depending from his finger.

"La Paperella," said he lightly. "Pardon me, Patty, but why are you so grave?"

"My thimble," said she, "has rolled down into the oven—my little gold thimble."

"And you can't reach it?"

"It is impossible."

"Nothing is impossible when a lady's behest spurs one on," said Mr. Waller, gallantly. "Stand aside one second, Penelope."

And he sprang valiantly into the yawning depths of the old brick oven.

It was decidedly warm, for the fires had just been taken out; it was decidedly dark, but no sooner had he entered, than Patty, a brilliant inspiration lighting her heart and face alike, swung the massive iron door to, and fastened it with the sturdy bolt.

"Hello!" said Mr. Waller, "what are you doing there, Patty?"

"I'm closing the door," breathlessly responded Patty.

"But I can't find your thimble in this Egyptian darkness."

"I don't want my thimble."

"Patty—Miss Farquahar—what do you mean?"

"I mean to have those letters back," announced Patty.

"Do you mean to roast me alive in this black hole of Calcutta?"

"I don't care much whether you roast or not," answered Patty.

"I shall shout for help."

"Shout away," said Patty, with a laugh. "Dinner is making out stocked by the fire, and mother has gone to the village. Do shout!"

"Patty," imploringly said Waller.

"Well?"

"Am I to be prisoner here for life?"

"Until you give me those letters."

"I can't," said Waller, "I haven't got them with me."

"But you can tell me where they are, I suppose" replied Patty.

The oven was hot and dark—a sensation akin to suffocation stole over Mr. Stuart Waller.

"Let me out," said he, grinding his teeth, "and I'll give them to you."

"That won't do," retorted Patty, "I must have them before you come out or not at all."

"Impossible!"

"Nothing is impossible when a lady's behest spurs one on," mimicked malicious Patty.

Mr. Waller uttered an ejaculation which was certainly not a prayer.

"I can't stand this broiling hole!" shouted he. "In the little summer house under the board of the table. Quick, or I shall be stifled to death" And Patty flew off as if her tiny feet were garnished with wings.

In the summer house, under the loose board of the table, lay the two letters, as Waller had said, wrapped in oiled silk, and tied with a yellow cigar ribbon. Catching them up, she tore them hurriedly open.

"I knew it wasn't 'Dear Stuart,'" she exclaimed, mockingly, and then tearing them into a shower of infinitesimal pieces, she flung them to the summer wind.

Half a minute later, Mr. Waller, crumpled as to linen, frowzy as to hair, and streamink with perspiration, crept out of his sultry cell Patty courtesied low to greet his egress.

"Walk out," said she, "onward and liar."

Mr. Waller made no reply. What could he have said?

He left Farquahar cottage that evening. He said he had received a telegram. Perhaps he had, but Patty had her doubts on that subject. At all events he disappeared, and Patty Farquahar breathed free again.

Morris Newton came back in October, and Patty married him. But she never told any one, even her husband, of the episode of the old brick oven and the two letters.

Tuberculosis. "This is a good way to start tuberculosis. I plainly hear a consumption coming on," remarked Fidget's Friend Gazette. "In old times we used, without pinching any holes for drainage, set them on the heated over the kitchen range and keep warm and wet. When well matted I move them to a cooler place, and, at the proper time set them out in the garden. In this way I have raised during the past two years vigorous plants, yielding from twenty to thirty-five blossoms each"
